example of an eastern woman re-born as a European.

It is one of my great regrets that, though we were stationed for years in the Bombay Presidency, and therefore lived in the very places Laurence Hope has made famous, it so happened that we were never there at the same time, though having missed only by a year at Mhow, and I have many friends who were stationed there, and at other places with her, and knew her well. She appeared about twenty-three years of age, and was the daughter of a Karachi newspaper editor, whose other daughter is " Victoria Cross."

She was small, with light brown hair, blue eyes, wore " baby " frocks, and hair tied up like a child's, and had been married very young to General Nicholson, a man of about sixty, so that she was usually mistaken for his daughter. Nevertheless, it was an ideal union of the mind and spirit, for General Nicholson had the same tastes as his wife, and in their private lives they both lived more like easterns than westerns, wearing Indian dress, eating Indian food, sitting upon the floor or reclining upon divans covered with beautiful embroideries—there was scarcely a
